On motion of Commissioner Work, seconded by Commissioner Millard, and unanimously carried, the minutes for the meetings of July 21, August 18, September 15, and October 20, 2005 were approved.

GUEST SPEAKERS – MR. FREDERICK KLUNDER, MS. TERRY WEISS, MR. RON LARSEN, LOS ANGELES SUPERIOR COURT REPRESENTATIVES. “OVERVIEW ON THE LATEST TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCES AND EQUIPMENT BEING USED BY THE COURTS”

Chair CeDillos welcomed and introduced Mr. Frederick Klunder, Chief Information Officer and Director of the Information Systems and Technology Bureau of the Los Angeles Superior Court.

Mr. Klunder reported that the Court has a network of over 6,500 workstations and 250 servers. The Information Systems and Technology Bureau is responsible for overseeing all of the Court's information technology efforts which encompasses its infrastructure, document retrieval and records management program, systems management, applications, people and processes. Although no longer an entity of the County, the Court system is still connected to the County's network and continues to maintain a mutually beneficial relationship with the County's Internal Services Department and Information Technology Division.

The Superior Court is currently involved in several key initiatives involving the use of electronic technology in its 600 courtrooms. Courtrooms have access to some of the most state-of-the-art electronic equipment and computer capabilities which include digital evidence presentation systems, mobile document cameras, worldwide audio conferencing, and wireless systems.

The Information Systems and Technology Bureau is continuing to work with the Court on its technology expansion plan, particularly in the areas of E-commerce, on-line court transactions, name index searches, case file management, e-filing on small claims cases, and electronic filing of documents. Also, plans are underway to expand the Court's document imaging program, and replacing the case management systems for civil, small claims and probate cases with contemporary web-based systems.

Following a question and answer period, Chair CeDillos thanked Mr. Klunder for his informative presentation.

Chair CeDillos welcomed and introduced Ms. Terry Weiss, Senior Administrator of Litigation Support for the Los Angeles Superior Court. Ms. Weiss gave an overview on the latest technology and equipment being used by court reporters.

Ms. Weiss reported that there are currently 630 official Court Reporters working in the 56 Courthouses. Each Court Reporter is responsible for their own equipment which must have computer programs compatible with the Court's systems. Three hundred seventy of the 630 Court Reporters are able to provide real time services to the bench officers, judges and attorneys in the courtroom.

The newest steno machines are paperless and have wireless capabilities. At this time, there are about 100 Court Reporters still using paper, however in 5 to 10 years, the Court anticipates they will have completely transitioned to a paperless system. The paperless system allows Court Reporters to edit, proof, and finalize the notes from a hearing electronically, then download the notes from his/her computer into an archive system. Hearing notes can be captured directly from the Court's server, a rough edit of the proceedings can be produced the same day, and laptop computers can be hooked up directly to the Court Reporter's steno machine to receive real time captioning of the day's court proceedings.

Following a question and answer period, Chair CeDillos thanked Ms. Weiss for her informative presentation.

Chair CeDillos welcomed and introduced Mr. Ron Larsen, Director of the Legal Support Division of the Superior Court who gave an overview on the evolution of the Electronic Recording Monitor Program in the Court.

The program originated back in the 50s and 60s when the Court began to look at alternative methods of reporting court proceedings. In early 1980, State legislation was passed for the initiation of a pilot electronic recording monitor program in a number of Counties. The demonstration program was initially implemented in five courtrooms then later the number of courtrooms was increased to 70.

However, during the latter part of 1980, due to propriety issues raised by the California Court Reporters Association on the expansion and continuation of the electronic recording monitoring program, which was a pilot program, the Court of Appeals ruled to discontinue the program and an Appellate Court decision enjoined the Courts from spending any future money for the use of electronic recording monitors, which is essential to the entire process of creating an official court record.

Currently, the Courts have approximately 97 courtrooms in the 22 courthouses set up with electronic recording monitors. However, those recordings are not considered official. There are only 5-7 locations where the electronic recording monitor is necessary to create the official record.

The problem the Courts are now facing is that Government statutes clearly state that the Court can use electronic recording monitors in very specified areas. However, to make the official record, the court has to have electronic recording monitors and the Court can't spend the money for the equipment. Therefore, when the Court does use tape, they can only make an unofficial record. That unofficial record is used for one specific purpose, and that is when a member of the public raises a concern about the propriety of the proceedings. The Judicial Officer can then listen to the entire process and determine whether or not there were any irregularities.

Mr. Larsen also brought with him an actual electronic recording monitor for the Commission to review and stated that the machine costs around $1,500. To replace any existing electronic recording monitor with the most current systems would cost anywhere from $3,000 to $70,000, depending on the type of equipment which is purchased.

Following a question and answer period, Chair CeDillos thanked Mr. Larsen for his informative presentation.
